Legal & General Multi-Index 4 Fund

Unit Trust (NURS non-complex) I-Class GBP Acc

WHAT'S THE STORY?

Investors were in for a rocky ride during the fourth quarter of 2018 as risk asset prices jerked lower and confidence crumbled. Although markets fear the US may now be in late cycle stage, the Federal Reserve shrank its balance sheet further. However, it did temper its 2019 interest rate hike projections from three to two. A mediocre showing at the US mid-term elections failed to dampen President Trump's enthusiasm for his trade spat with China, damaging the Chinese economy. Meanwhile in Europe, business sentiment melted as tensions bubbled away over Brexit, Italy's unsustainable fiscal proposals, and civil unrest in France.

Asset-wise, US equities lost ground so that 2018 performance entered negative territory. UK equities suffered from Brexit woes, and Japanese equities also plunged. Although emerging market equities and debt provided some respite, high yield debt, REITs and listed infrastructure were hurt. Certain sovereigns assumed their safe haven role, with US Treasuries, gilts, bunds and Australian bond yields compressing.

FUND REVIEW

The fund delivered a negative return over the quarter. Led by the stand-out performers of 2017 and early 2018: US technology stocks, risk assets have taken a tumble. Even Japanese equities plummeted, despite their strong recovery in the third quarter after encouraging signs of Japanese economic growth. Against this backdrop, US and UK equities damaged portfolio performance the most, followed by European and Japanese equities. Conversely, emerging market local currency debt outperformed.

In terms of portfolio changes: during November, we added a new commodities position to our strategic asset allocation, in order to diversify; taking exposure to an asset class which has historically outperformed during the late cycle stage. We reduced our Global REITs position, as it continues to outperform broad equities.

Elsewhere, we shifted some of our sovereign bond exposure from Australian and broad-market European debt to Italian government bonds, to take advantage of the strong relative value opportunity which opened up during the Italian budget tensions. In December, once Italy stabilised and credit spreads normalised, we took profits. On the inflation side, we reassigned some of our global inflation-linked bond exposure to Treasury inflation-protected securities to protect against inflation in the US. Also, we reintroduced US energy stocks as they have underperformed versus their usual relationship with the oil price. This is based on our thesis that the oil price is likely to be buoyed after bottoming out during December.

OUTLOOK

We see next year as the start of the twilight zone between expansion and a downturn marking the end of the cycle; an environment where a point forecast for equities at the end of 2019 becomes increasingly useless. However, those hoping for a return to tranquillity may be disappointed. Currently, we prefer European and Japanese to US stocks; we also favour the technology and US energy sectors.

In fixed income and currency markets, the interest rate differential between the US and elsewhere could widen, triggering more US dollar appreciation and yield increases in the first half of the year. However, US exceptionalism may run out of steam by mid-year as the focus switches to 2020's election. In 2019, pressure on the euro could continue as Brexit negotiations go to the wire, and the confrontation between the Italian government and the European Commission heads into the eleventh hour.

One important concern is the potential for a persistent change in the relationship between equities and bonds. Bonds' shock-absorbing capacity could disappear when an inflationary mindset takes hold. We expect continued pressure on credit markets. However, consistent with our constructive outlook for emerging market fundamentals; emerging market debt (both hard and local currency) looks increasingly interesting.

Exchange rate changes may cause the value of any overseas investments to rise or fall. Multi-Index funds are sensitive to interest rate changes. At times, especially over shorter timescales, lower risk-profiled funds may fall in value by more than higher risk-profiled funds. An increase in medium to long-term interest rates is likely to reduce the value of an investment in these funds. The funds invest in riskier bonds, known as sub-investment grade bonds. These bonds pay higher interest rates to try to provide more attractive income returns. The value of property is generally a matter of valuer's opinion rather than fact.
